Electoral Studies

Electoral Studies is an international journal serving those scholars concerned with voting, the central act in the democratic process. Political scientists, economists, contemporary historians, sociologists, game theorists, lawyers and geographers are focusing attention on what causes a nation's voters to act as they do, and on the consequences. Political scientists and other pragmatic observers have studied the impact of electoral systems, and the specific legal rules concerning voting and campaigning. Mathematicians, statisticians and game theorists have been drawn to the study of voting, the properties of electoral systems, applied social choice and electoral strategy. Electoral Studies provides a forum for these diverse approaches. It publishes articles on elections in particular countries and a record of significant election results across the world as well as on electoral systems and behaviour. Its scope is both theoretical and empirical. Articles are refereed before publication. Those wishing to submit articles or notes for publication should send three copies to one of the Editors at the addresses below. "Electoral Inquiry" is a new section of Electoral Studies. Papers published in "Electoral Inquiry" will provide accessible expositions of methodological approaches and techniques useful for advancing the theoretical and empirical study of electoral choice and election outcomes. Submissions for "Electoral Inquiry" are welcome; for additional information, please contact Harold Clarke, Editor-in-Chief. Contributors should refer to the Notes for Authors on the inside back cover.
